How the free rental application template works The free rental application templates above can be used to collect relevant information from potential tenants. The applicant information can be used to pull financial reports and conduct background checks so you can decide whether to approve potential tenants. Be sure to download the right template based on your personal needs. The best time to use each form includes: Single family home form: The rental application form for a single-family owner is ideal if your rental property is a separate single-family residence; samples can also work for secluded restaurants or edi houses in some cases Holiday rental property templates: Holiday rental templates should only be used if you are renting a property for a short time; long-term rentals, be sure to use one of the other Condo & Apartment templates: This application form is great for homeowners who own multiple apartments or apartments; even if these apartments are located in independent buildings, this template helps you get information to rent a unit in an association These rental application templates should only be used as a base for work. Be sure to consult a real estate attorney to ensure you comply with state and local landlord-tenant laws as well as the Fair Housing Act (FHA) and the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA), among others. When using a rental application Application form for renting an application should be used whenever you rent your property to a tenant. This can include a room in your main residence, vacation rental property, or apartment. It is recommended that you use the rental application form for tenants who will live in the hotel for a month or so. All people with rental apartments should use a rental application. It is not only a tool to identify a suitable tenant, but it is also a tools to keep all your tenant information handy. — Evan Peoples, Broker, Spaces Real Estate A generally suitable rental application: If the tenant is renting out your vacation rental property through a website like Airbnb or VRBO, the rental application form is usually not used. Instead, the site will collect a copy of the tenant's identities, and they will collect the full payment for the advance rental period as well as the deposit and cleaning fee. This is usually done in place of a full tenant screening. What to include in an application form a rental application form should include basic personal, professional, and financial information. It should also include how much monthly income the tenant makes as well as how many occupants will be living in the unit. Keep in mind that don't include anything on the rental application form that is a protected class like race, religion, sexual orientation, and so on. 1. The date of completion of the rental application This must be at the beginning of the application and not the date the tenant wishes to move in but only the date they fill out the information. This is important because you can have more qualified tenants, and you can choose the one who fills out the application first. 2. Application fee The rent application fee is usually found at the top of the application and is usually filled out by the landlord. Filing fees typically vary from $25 to $100, but some apartment buildings and co-ops charge more. There are laws around how much landlords can charge for filing fees that vary by state. For more information, you can consult a local attorney. This is why it is best for a property management software like Avail to set the application rental fee and screen the tenant for you. It complies with state and federal law, and that's one thing less than you have to worry about. Contact the company today to screen your applicant, check their origin and help you make a specific state lease. Visit Avail 3. Real Estate Information The next information on our free rental application form is property information. This includes the property's full address including the number of apartments and buildings if any. This is often forgotten on rental forms but is extremely important if you have multiple properties. By asking tenants to fill in the property address, they know which property and unit they're filing with, and you can keep their application in the correct property file. You will also need to protect your tenants' sensitive information so be sure to keep their papers under lock and key. 4. Applicant Information The applicant's information section should include: The applicant's full name The applicant's current address and the time they lived there The phone number The driver's license email address or social security number identification number The name and phone number of the applicant's current landlord current criminal history including arrests, crimes and Remember, that age is considered a protected class under the Fair Housing Act. Generally, you should not ask for the age of the applicant unless you are verifying their identity after screening them, or if you are renting a property in an age-restricted community as a community for residents 55 and older. One of the biggest advantages of getting this kind of information from potential tenants is that the basic information will confirm quickly whether the information they have provided is honest. This is a great reason to work with a company like Avail because they can coordinate tenant applications, background checks, and credit reports. 5. Employment of applicants This section should include the applicant's current employment status along with the employment history if they have been employed in their current role for less than two years. The applicant's employment section on the application form should include: Employer Name Employer Name Monitoring Phone Number & email address Job length Total monthly income Additional income It is important to find out the applicant's job information so that you can verify their employment with the person screening service rent a house. You can also find out if they have enough income to afford the rent. Typically, landlords require tenants to pay three times or more of their monthly rent to qualify for rental properties. 6. Additional occupants In general, additional occupants are used for any child, aged 18 and under, living in the hotel. Keep in mind that it's illegal to discriminate against tenants based on their family status including the number of children. However, due to the risk of fire, you may not accept applicants with three children for a one bedroom apartment. It is generally recommended that you screen every applicant over the age of 18 who will be living in the property. That way you know who lives in your property, their credit rating, and their criminal history. You also know if they can afford to pay their own monthly rent. This is very important for both the couple and the room partner. If one person moves out, you want to make sure the remaining tenants can still afford to make rental payments. 7. Pets Some buildings do not allow pets but, if you own property and buildings that allow pets, it is up to you if you want to accept them and if you want to charge a pet deposit. Keep in mind that any pet policy you choose should be the same for each tenant in that unit. In this section of the rental application form, information about the type, breed and weight of each pet is collected. This is because some areas such as Miami-Dade County in Florida have certain breeding restrictions and some buildings have pet weight restrictions. 8. Disclosure of disclosures should be explained in accordance with fair housing and credit laws in your state. However, it should be clearly stated that the tenant is providing you with to run their credit, background checks, and contact employers and landlords for reference. It should also mention that you comply with the Fair Credit Reporting Act and the Fair Housing Act. 9. Applicant's Signature & Application Date must be signed for it to take effect. Signatures and signing dates must be the last line on the kidney application form. They acknowledge that the applicant has read the application and agreed to its terms.
