Also, you want to make sure that you have enough of the item available in your inventory. If you have very few when you attract animals to you, those who receive no will become aggressive, and you will have to fight them. Be sure to double-check the pet you want to go after. The particular food item you will need to tame them. An Animal refers to any animal or monster domed within the universe of the Cube World. A pet can be dobaded simply by feeding it with its favorite food, after it helps the player fight monsters After the official release on Steam, there is no XP or Leveling for the pet, instead it actually gets stronger based on what their armor is. A pet, once captured, can also be stored in the inventory and removed at will. There is no limit to how many pets a character can have, and all character classes can have pets. Only one pet can ('equipping'-it in the pet slot). Other pets are stored in the pet tab. Pets have their own skills or movements. Currently there is no command interface for pets to change their behavior. Pet Types Melee Pets: Most pets attack from melee range. Pets in the distance: Some pets can fire projectiles from a distance. Tank Pets: Tank Pets Deal Less Less but have greater resistance and generate more aggro. Healer Pets: Some pets have healing skills to heal their master and friends. Mount Pets: Many pets can be mounted for fast movement. Dodging most of the animals and some monsters in Cube World can be dotted. To tame a pet, you need to feed it with your favorite food (you can look for pet food for more information on which food goes to which pet) - this is done by simply clicking on a specific pet food when you are on the pet tab and approaching the potential pet (you can have an active pet while trying to tame another. Once the pet is tamed, it will be replaced by the newly domesticated pet, and the other will be stored in your inventory). Currently the process is automatically successful, you just need to wait until your heart gets big while they take your pet food. The challenge is to find out what food a creature likes and get the food, whether it's finding it in a store or more likely as a drop of serve. When taming a creature, try to find one that is alone because if they are in a group, all creatures of the same type as the same food will approach you, but only one will be tamed while the others will become hostile. Note that currently, although the named boss versions of a pet may be tamed, although the next time the game is loaded it will have reverted to a normal version of the pet, losing its boss status. Pet Foods Although few pet foods are known, some have been discovered due to closed alpha game game videos. More pet food is likely to be discovered in the near future, as the game is now publicly released. It is possible to carry more than one of the same types of pet food at a time by equipping the specified pet food and then picking up the second pet food (only one pet food can be performed at the same time). List of pets See the list of pets for a complete list of pets, including the type of pet, whether they are able to ride, food used to tame them and landscapes in which they are found. Naming the Pet The current active animal can be given a name (or renamed at any time) by opening the game chat by pressing enter and entering the following command: /namepet <name>; Riding Reins is a special item, so it will only work in the region where you found Riding a pet requires taming a mountable pet first, then owning a Reins that was collected in the region Since Reins is a Special Item it will only work in the region where you gathered it. If you want to use it in another region, you would have to find it again in that region). Once both conditions are met, the pet can be mounted when set as the active pet (i.e. placed in the Pet Slot) by being near it/looking at it and pressing the Hot Call/Ride Pet key (standard T). To disassemble a pet, carry out any attack - this means that combat cannot be sustained while riding a pet, thus excluding drive-by shootouts (unless you quickly reassemble the pet after each attack). Performing a dodge will also remove the character from the pet, as well as drop high <name>; </name>; to suffer fall damage, or by pressing the shift key (only when a GUI is not on the screen). Combat Currently, pets will never start combat, even if the player is attacked. Once a player attacks something, however, the pet will join immediately. Switching targets will cause the animal to change targets as well, so it's a good idea to focus on one enemy at a time. The only way to prevent a pet from attacking is with the Hotkey Call Pet (standard T) (To use the whistle, if you start riding it it will continue to attack), although the pet will immediately fight again if the player attacks again. As for player characters, currently there is no death penalty for pets - you can immediately open your inventory, pick up the pet (dead) from the slot machine and then immediately put it back, and it will instantly reappear at your feet, alive. This is also useful for remembering pets that have been left behind due to cliff jumping, hang gliding or boat mischief. Dead pets that are not immediately called and simply left in the Pet Slot will automatically end up automatically reviving alongside the player's character after about a minute. Planned rare animals are a planned feature in Cube World. They differ in normal animals look and will be harder to find. Pet Evolution is a planned feature that will allow some pets to evolve. No information has been given on how you will achieve this in the game yet. Still.
